

[Innisfree] truly is a special place — very few gardens have been designed with such clear intent, and even fewer have survived with that intent intact. When people come visit New York, this is the garden I love to take them to. Martha Stewart, “Innisfree Garden,” The Radio Blog (2010)

Today, amidst the chaos of contemporary life, a passion for gardens and the environment, and a desire for tranquility and wonder have been rekindled. As a result, the timeless Innisfree experience is ever more timely. The Innisfree Foundation would like to answer this call with enriched interpretive and educational offerings. As the garden ages, however, more work (and thus more funding) is required to keep up with basic maintenance, much less undertake specialized preservation and emergency repair projects or develop new public programs. Despite facing substantial financial challenges from day one, the Innisfree Foundation has a proven record of responsible stewardship. The vision shared by Lester Collins and Walter and Marion Beck is alive in a garden that has opened its gates to visitors from around the world since 1960.

Help preserve this iconic mid-20th century landscape and enable future generations to enjoy its timeless wonders by making a tax-deductible donation today. Members receive free admission to the garden and discounted tickets for tours and other events. Patron’s Society members are also invited to an annual garden party.
